

Susan Brennan

Seymour Heights resident • self-described “serial volunteer”

Susan and her partner Ken Witcher have lived in the Seymour Heights area for over 40 years. She calls herself a “serial volunteer” because she has been involved in leadership roles with clubs and non-profits since her teen years. On the North Shore, she helped form the Seymour Area Youth Services Society, which built and ran the Seymour Youth Centre in the ’90s, and served on a number of District of North Vancouver committees.

As a computer programmer most of her working life, Susan developed and maintained business software for companies in many industries. Now retired from that career, she helps Ken run a comic books and collectibles store in Vancouver called Nifty Keen Stuff.

Susan earned her bachelor’s degree in mathematics in the U.S. and a certificate in non-profit management from SFU. She holds both American and Canadian citizenship. Susan has a grown daughter, Margot — another computer geek like her mother — who lives in the Bay Area of California, and Ken’s son Justin has been a red seal chef for nearly 20 years. In what leisure time she has, Susan enjoys digging in her garden and into genealogy for herself and others.
